He was the instigator of bringing the Four Shires Guild, which had thrived before the war, back into existence in the early 1970s, becoming the first Secretary of the new Guild. Later he became President of the Four Shires Guild and during that time started very successful outings on one Thursday a month for the senior members of the Guild.

He enjoyed ringing tunes on handbells and attended many handbell concerts.

He was a builder by profession.

He died on 1st February 1996 at Badsey, where his funeral took place on February 10th.
